

MUSICAL HEARTS

Version 1: This game is similar to musical chairs. First you must make one big red heart that a person can hold in both hands. Everyone stands in a circle. A parent, teacher, or a student then plays music (it can be any popular love song or song about friendship). As the music plays you pass the paper heart clock-wise. When the music stops the person standing on the left of the person holding the heart is "out" - he or she must exit the game. The game continues when the music begins again. The game continues until the last person remains holding the heart.

Version 2: Instead of Chairs, place cardboard/poster board hearts on the floors. Start out with one less heart on the floor than the number of children. Play music. When you stop music, everyone tries to stand on a heart. Whoever is not on a heart is out. Continue, removing one heart each time you lose a player until you get a winner.
